

GILL LEWIS Animal Riddle Challenge

To write about an animal we have to try to see the world from its point of view. We have to try to imagine what it feels like to be that animal. One of the ways we can do this is by thinking about how that animal uses all its senses to understand the world around it.

So, think of a wild animal, any wild animal. Then think which senses it uses the most – does your animal have a very good sense of smell, or the ability to hear ultrasonic sounds? What would it feel beneath its paws, or against its skin?

Then write one or two descriptive sentences after each sense:

What am I?

I see ...

I hear ...

I taste ...

I smell ...

I feel ...

What am I?

Draw your animal here if it helps you to imagine what it must be like to be that animal.

See if your friends can guess
the animal you have chosen.
