Interview with a Gaelic Officer in Glasgow

Name: Jonathan Angell

Role: Gaelic Officer (Keep Scotland Beautiful)

Location: Glasgow

Date: 26 November 2025

Q1. Why do you work with Gaelic?

I believe it's important to support a language and culture that is so unique. I learned Gaelic in high school and it opened up opportunities I would never otherwise have had – cultural events, music, conversation and community.

Q2. How is Gaelic used in Glasgow?

You can see Gaelic in place names, in schools, and in community groups. Several organisations run classes, Gaelic songs sessions, and conversation groups. Gaelic Medium Education is also growing here.

Q3. How has Gaelic changed in Glasgow?

More young people are learning Gaelic and taking part in Gaelic events. There is growing interest in Gaelic songs, traditional culture, and even place names.

Q5. Why is it important to use Gaelic – “Use it or lose it”?

If we use Gaelic in our communities, more people see it as a natural part of daily life. Speaking it and writing it is how we keep it alive.

Q6. Do you have any personal experience with place names or local heritage?

I enjoy looking at maps and discovering what place names tell us about the landscape – for example “An t-Eas Smùid” (The Smoky Falls) or “Eilean nan Roin” (Island of Seals). They reveal the history of the area.

Gaelic in Glasgow – A Short Article

Introduction

Gaelic is one of Scotland's oldest languages, and today it is growing again in places you might not expect. Glasgow has become an important centre for Gaelic learning and culture. To find out more, we spoke to a Gaelic Officer working in the city, who shared his knowledge and experience.

Why Gaelic is important

Gaelic is important because it helps keep a unique language and culture alive, and it can open doors to amazing opportunities like cultural events, music, and connections within communities.

Gaelic in the Community

From the interview, the Gaelic Officer explained that Gaelic can be seen in everyday places around Glasgow, especially in place names.

How Gaelic Is Changing in Glasgow

According to the Gaelic Officer, interest in Gaelic has grown a lot, especially among young people. Many now take part in events like singing sessions, cultural workshops, and competitions connected to Gaelic.

The reasons that Gaelic is important

He explained that if people speak, write, and listen to Gaelic, it becomes a natural part of daily life in Glasgow. But if people stop using it, the language becomes weaker.

Gaelic and Local Heritage

In the interview, the officer mentioned his own interest in Gaelic place names. He enjoys looking at maps and discovering what these names tell us about the land. Gaelic place names often describe nature, animals, or old settlements.

Conclusion

From our interview and research, it is clear that Gaelic is becoming stronger in Glasgow. More pupils are learning it, more signs and classes exist, and more people are proudly using the language in music, culture, and daily life.
